The Rabbit Industry

This great war has taught the people of this country many things, especially that it has unlimited resources never before utilized. The greatest of all is the domestic rabbit. Before the war, rabbit breeding was considered a hobby, or child's play. Today, there are many thousands of smart business men breeding rabbits for food, fur, and fancy, making thousands of dollars, and in addition in a great many cases, regaining health. The rabbit industry is here to stay, when a man or woman can produce enough meat from a few rabbits in the back yard to supply their table at a low cost, especially the finest and most nutritious meat known; do not let the pessimist try to make you believe otherwise.

The rabbit business is not a get-rich-quick proposition, as one must have some knowledge of it to be successful. The beginner as well as the experienced breeder should read the magazines published in the interest of the business, as almost daily new ideas are discovered that will help all. Beginners should read all the good books on the subject, written by successful breeders, who give you the benefit of their years of experience. List of such books and magazines will be found on another page of this book.

To give you an idea of the mammoth possibilities of the industry: England markets annually about $175,000,000 worth of rabbit meat, France about the same, and little Belgium before the war marketed annually about $75,000,000. The outlook for the rabbit-canning industry is also of mammoth proportions, as this country before the war imported thousands of 2-pound cans of rabbit meat, used mostly by ship chandlers on our coasts.

THE DOMESTIC RABBIT.

There are many varieties of domestic rabbits. Following is a list of the principal ones: Belgian Hare, Flemish Giants, American Checkered Giants, New Zealand Reds, Dutch, American Blues, Angoras, Himalayan, and Polish. As the breeding and care of all varieties is practically the same, the following short articles will help the beginner.

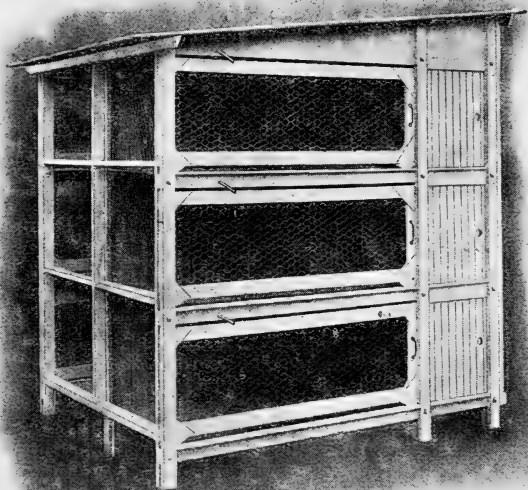

The domestic rabbit is not to be compared with the wild rabbit, or cotton-tail. They are far different in looks, habits and flesh. A domestic rabbit will not thrive under same conditions a wild rabbit would. So a beginner should procure a good book and study it very carefully before buying stock and engaging in this industry.

A person can keep twenty-five breeding does in a small house 14x14. Each doe will average about four litters a year. Each litter will average six rabbits. Young rabbits can be made to weigh six pounds at four to five months of age. So you have produced in a year's time nearly two tons of the finest and most nutritious meat grown. Besides being a wonderful meat producer, the fur of the domestic rabbit is

"Up-to-the-Minute" Rabbit Hutch

(Collapsible)

This Hutch OVERCOMES (at present) one of the greatest drawbacks to the rabbit industry. Through its adoption the experienced breeder KNOWS and the BEGINNER is assured of complete safety for his stock. Experienced breeders who are using; testify that this hutch fully meets every requirement and are universally agreed and endorse the "Up-to-the-Minute" as STORM-PROOF, SANITARY and LABOR SAVING—three requisites to SAFETY and PROFIT in rabbit breeding.

Announcement

We wish to take this opportunity to thank all breeders and advertisers, who made it possible to get out this fine book at such a low price. We can recommend all of them to you, as we have exercised great care in accepting advertising. When writing advertisers be sure and mention this book.

If your name does not appear in this book, send it to us at once, and it will appear in future editions, as we will print many thousands more during the coming year. We will increase the size of this book until every breeder is listed. We would like to have all breeders and dealers handle this book, and will make a very liberal contract.

Now that the war is over, we have greater opportunities than ever, in a short time many thousand head of stock will be shipped to foreign countries to replenish their plants. The food and fur industry will be greater than ever. Now everybody raise something during the next year; there is room for everybody. Wishing you all success, and a prosperous year, we are,

Very truly yours, very valuable. A great many of the fine furs you see daily are rabbit, dyed and made up to imitate the more expensive furs, such as Fox, Ermine, Mink, Beaver, Seal, etc. The fur of the domestic rabbit is in great demand by hat manufacturers for making felt hats.

HOW TO BEGIN.

In the first place make up your mind what variety you wish to breed; then order your stock from some reliable breeder; you will find such breeders' advertisements in this book. The beginner should start with at least a trio; be sure the male is not related to the does; a good plan is to buy your buck from one breeder and does from another. Do not breed from immature stock; a rabbit should be at least seven months old before being bred and even a little older is better, as you will get bigger and stronger offspring. In selecting your rabbits, you can judge their age by their claws. If the claw is long, and beyond the fur, it is a sure sign they are old; the eye should be full and sparkling, and free from yellow in the white portion, as this is indication of poor health. Be sure they do not have cold or snuffles; this can be detected by sneezing, and watery discharges from the nose. The best rabbits for the beginner is utility stock, until a little experience has been acquired; then pedigreed or registered stock can be procured.

that is out of the weather, will make suitable rabbitry. The essential requirements are cleanliness, dryness, and free from draughts. Hutches may be built in tiers, three or four feet high. A hutch 4 feet long, 2 feet wide and 2 feet high is large enough for doe and her litter until weaned. A small box 12 inches square with round hole cut in side may be used for nest box. If you expect to build extensively, modern plans for self-cleaning hutches may be procured from Gilmore's Rabbit Farm, Santa Barbara, Cal. (See Cuts of Hutches of C. P. Joseph and W. H. Stopple on another page).

FEEDING.

The proper feeding of rabbits is of great importance. Rabbits, as a rule, should be fed twice a day, morning and evening, just as much as they will clean up in an hour. However, this rule has exceptions; the best plan is, become acquainted with the needs of your animals and feed accordingly. Rabbits thrive on a variety of foods, such as whole or rolled oats, barley, wheat and alfalfa, and clover hay; also bread, milk, carrots, cabbage and green grass. However, green food should be fed sparingly, especially to young stock. Above all be sure fresh water is in front of them at all times.

BREEDING.

Always take the doe to the buck's hutch when breeding; some does will not breed at once. In that case, try her each day until she does. After the doe is bred, place her in the hutch where she is to raise her young, as she will have young thirty days from the time she is bred. About a week before time for her to bring young, see that she has nesting box and supply of nice clean hay or straw. The doe will build her own nest anywhere from an hour to several days before young arrive, lining it with fur pulled from her own breast. Do not disturb or handle doe unless absolutely necessary, and see that she is not worried or frightened by dogs, etc., or you may lose the litter. It is advisable to keep strangers away about the time young are expected, also for a few days after. Young will come out of the box in from 2 to 3 weeks, then nest can be cleaned and disinfected and fresh straw put in.

DRESSING.

To kill, take rabbit by hind legs, letting head hang down; strike a sharp blow with round stick on back of head just back of the ears. Cut the throat at once to bleed the carcass. Cut an opening in the abdomen between the hind legs and fill several times with cold water, as this drives out the animal heat and makes the meat more palatable. To remove the hide, cut around the first joint of hind legs, then across under the tail from one leg to the other; draw skin from the legs, turning it inside out, drawing down toward the head. After cutting carcass to pieces, allow it to stand in salt water for an hour or so, then it is ready for the finest dish in the world.

To tan the hide, we recommend Young's Tanning Compound advertised elsewhere in this book.

DISEASES.

Rabbits are naturally strong and hardy. Most diseases are caused by unsanitary conditions and neglect. Keep your hutches clean and well ventilated and you will have little trouble from disease. A good disinfectant is very essential. Better to order a supply of remedies before disease comes, as immediate treatment will be very effective. Following are few of common ailments:

SNUFFLES.

Caused by filthy quarters, overfeeding and draughts. Symptoms—Sneezing, with watery discharge from nostrils, which turns to white mucous discharge as disease develops, and in advance stages to yellow, with very offensive odor. The rabbit refuses to eat, is feverish and coat becomes rough. As it is very contagious, be sure and isolate animal affected from others, in a dry place, free from draughts and administer good Snuffle remedy. Caldwell Rabbit Farm Remedy is guaranteed to cure. Always have some on hand.

EAR CANKER.

Ear Canker is caused by vegetable parasite lodging in ear; can be detected by rabbit shaking head, or holding it to one side. Examine animal and you will find small incrustation. If not treated at once, it will spread sometimes working into head and brain, killing the rabbit. If treated at once, will cause little trouble. If no remedy on hand, a few drops of camphorated oil will help and cure in most cases.

Outdoor Enterprise Publishing Co.

408 Admiral Blvd. Kansas City, Missouri.

SLOBBERS.

This disease is more noticeable in young stock, caused by young eating too soon on account of lack of nourishment from mother. It is a digestive disorder. Symptoms—Constant flow of saliva from mouth, wetting fur of lower jaw, chest, and fore-legs. This is not serious if treated at once. Use good slobber remedy; if none available, take small pinch of common table salt and rub it on the wet fur around the mouth. Be sure the rabbit has an entire change of diet.

There are several more diseases that affect rabbits, but are not common. Get good book; keep supply of reliable remedies on hand, and your loss will be small. Caldwell Farm Remedies are guaranteed to cure (See ad. on another page).

Breeders, Exhibitors & Shippers

High Class Stock in Rufus Red Belgian
Hares, New Zealand Reds, Flemish Giants
Cavies, Rats and Mice.

We can furnish you with the best stock obtainable in any of the mentioned breeds.

We have many Registered Winning Bucks at stud, prices for stud fee reasonable.

Send us your doe to be bred and have her registered while here, it will only cost you breeding fee plus $1.00 for registration fee.

There is a mint to be made in breeding White Mice. Write us for prices. We have a good proposition to offer. We also have a good proposition to offer on Guinea Pigs (Cavies)

Seriously, Now Fanciers!

Do you realize that your immediate success depends absolutely on your foundation stock? If you begin with poor stock, you raise poor stock. It will take years to get them up to standard. Meanwhile, you sell your surplus at "poor stock" prices. If you pay a few dollars more and get the real A-No. 1 Quality kind, that some experienced fancier has spent time, study, money and hard work to breed above the average, you get the benefits from the start. There is always a lot of "below-the-average" stock for sale; but the "above-the-average" class can't begin to fill the demand.

When selecting your foundation, get it from a BREEDER whose reputation for square, honest, upright dealing is unquestioned in every part of the country; whose stock is standard for show and utility qualities, and whose strains are in DEMAND.

Our reputation for honest dealings and good sound, healthy quality stock is NATION-WIDE.

Our stock is standard in color, type, size, build, etc.

Our strains are in demand; proven by the fact that we have orders booked far in advance, and that a large part of our business is from re-orders, and recommendations from satisfied customers.

Our stock is fed on good, wholesome food, and raised in sanitary, Out-Door Hutches, and in a climate that is absolutely ideal. Purchasers of our strains are not only started on the road to success but are assisted in every possible way as long as that assistance is needed.

We Breed, Sell, and Exhibit, Successfully, only the very highest quality, grade of

Elemish Giants

New Zealand Reds

Rufus Red Belgians

All stock is fully pedigreed and registered; our breeders are the result of several years of careful breeding, grading, selection, and study, and from an efficiency standpoint, are unequalled. See our show winnings this year.

We make a specialty of stud bucks and brood does for fanciers desiring new blood to introduce into their strains.

Stock sold on a positive guarantee to please or money back.

Our supply department is complete in every detail, and carries remedies, books, supplies for every single need of the rabbit and business. Write for catalogue.

THE BLACK SIBERIAN HARE

By Dr. H. M. Evans.

When this specie of hare first arrived in this country (Canada), the newspaper men for miles around came to see them and in their reports called them the Black Siberian Hare, so that name has stuck to them ever since they arrived from Siberia.

They were admired for their size, beautiful black glossy coat and strong, racey type. There is as much difference between the Black Siberian and the Flemish, in type, as there is between the New Zealand Red and the Belgian and the judge who cannot tell the difference between the Siberian and the Flemish should have his license canceled by the authority who issued it.

The Black Siberian is as distinct a type as any variety of hare or rabbit in existence and is growing more popular, both in Canada and the United States each and every year.

Flemish breeders in the U. S. are realizing this and are importing Black Siberian bucks from Canada to cross on Flemish does and are selling the progeny of this cross as pure blooded Siberians. Prospective purchasers should be aware of this fraud and demand a registered pedigree from the breeder he buys from, and if he cannot furnish it, just give him a wide berth. Of course, the genuine specimen, pedigreed and registered, will cost more, but it is worth more, just as the genuine is always more valuable than a counterfeit. Don't buy a counterfeit.

The Black Siberian Hare is going to take the place of the wild fur-bearing animals, which are fast becoming extinct, and its fur comes between the very expensive Black Fox and that of the cheaper fur-bearing animals. The skin of the Siberian Hare when tanned is almost untearable, while that of the common rabbit can be punctured by ones finger.

These animals are, however, too scarce at present to be slaughtered for their furs, and for some time to come there will be a good market at good prices for breeding stock. While being bred for its valuable fur its flesh makes a real dainey, with a flavor between that of chicken and spring lamb.

The Siberian Hare grows rapidly and matures quickly. The young at six months of age will weigh 8 and 9 pounds, even more, and often those of small litters with good care will weigh even more at that age. Much depends upon the feeding of the nursing doe during the suckling period and the care of the young after weaning, as well as the number of young in a litter.

These animals are very hardy and require no more care or attention than the common rabbit. They need dry, well ventilated quarters, and must be kept clean and free from drafts. They will eat all sorts of vegetables, grass, and a great variety of weeds, as well as oats or any other grain, bran, etc., clover hay and alfalfa. They thrive best in a moderately cold climate but do well in all climates.

A comparison of the Black Siberian Hare with the black fox gives the advantage to the former. You can begin fur farming with the Black Siberian Hare with an investment of from $20 to $50, while it takes several hundred dollars to buy a pair of black foxes. It costs dollars to feed a pair of foxes where it costs cents to feed a pair of hares. One male must be kept for every female fox, while one male will serve twenty females in the hare family. The Black Fox breeds only once a year and even this is very uncertain, while the Black Siberian Hare breeds four and six times a year, and with good management ever oftener. The pelt of a full grown Siberian Hare is fully as large as that of the Black Fox.

Prospective purchasers should even demand a registered pedigree from Canadian breeders, as we have men in this country who are mean enough to impose upon the unsuspecting beginner.

Our breeding stock is all registered and any breeder can have his stock registered in The Rabbit and Hare Society of Wyoming, Ont., Canada.

BLACK SIBERIAN HARES

Pedigreed and Registered Stock only.

Ours is from the originally imported stock, and all our breeders are registered with the Rabbit and Hare Society of Canada. No Flemish, Black Rabbit, or Mongrel crosses on our premises. Buy the genuine article. Demand a registered pedigreed from the breeder. Prices in harmony with first class stock.

WYOMING, ONTARIO, CANADA.

THE CAVY

(Commonly called Guinea Pig.)

There are three breeds of Cavies, but several varieties of each breed. The breeds are English, Abyssinian, Peruvian. The English is the smooth, short-haired cavy; it is bred in many colors; also broken colors. It is the breed that is used exclusively in laboratories, hospitals, etc., for experimental purposes. The demand is greater each year for these little animals, and the demand is greater than the supply, as will be noticed by so many advertising for them. The Abyssinian Cavy is distinguished from the English by its hair, which is rough and wiry, having as many little rosettes as possible. The hair of the Peruvian Cavy is long and silky, the hair on the Peruvian Cavy has been known to grow fifteen inches long. For standards and more information on these animals, we would suggest you get James E. Young's boog on Cavies, or Edwin F. Dieckes' book. Both will give you all the information desired.

Housing.

A box 2 feet long, 2 feet wide and 1 foot deep will accommodate 4 sows and a boar. These boxes may be built in tiers three or four feet high. If used out doors, be sure they are protected from cold and dampness, as a cavy can not stand much cold and should not be kept where temperature is lower than forty degrees above zero.

Breeding.

A sow should not be bred more than four times a year. A breeding pen may consist of three or four sows and a boar. When the sow shows signs of being with young, it is best to remove her to pen with other bred sows; however, she may be keut in same pen and removed after she has kindled, to pen with other sows and young, as the young will nurse any mother and the mother will nurse another's young; in this way, feeding can be distributed. In the case any sow shows signs of fight, remove her to another pen, as change will nearly always quiet them.

The period of gestation is from 63 to 72 days, the young are fully developed when born and within an hour are running around.

Feeding.

Nothing but the best foods should be fed. During the summer, feeding is a small item, as the cavy will eat a variety of greens, such as carrot tops, beet tops, lettuce, turnips, grass and weeds. Some hay and oats should also be fed during the summer months. During the winter, oats, corn, barley hay, may be fed with table scraps, such as dry bread, celery tops, apple and potato parings. We have raised hundreds of cavies and never given a drop of water as long as we fed plenty of green food. The cavy requires very little water. However, some breeders have water before them at all times.

Diseases.

Cavies are not subject to many diseases; with good food and clean hutches, you will have very little trouble.

Diarrhoea.

Caused by feeding of too much green food or too sudden a change of food. Remove animal to other quarters and feed plenty of hay and oats without green food for two or three days.

Constipation.

Caused by not enough green food.

Paralysis.

Caused by damp hutches; in a case of this kind, kill the animal, as there is no cure.

Tuberculosis.

In cases where many are kept together, you will find quite often a cavy that is getting thin; you will notice it is timid and the others drive it from its food. Separate the animal and feed plenty of green food. If it does not improve, kill it.

GUINEA PIGS WANTED

Best prices paid for guinea pigs weighing eight ounces and over. We are one of the largest users of guinea pigs in the world; our demand is steady all year round, and to those who furnish us with guinea pigs during the time they are scarce, we pay the same price during the time they are plentiful. By doing this, the breeders have a steady market where they are sure of a price which makes raising guinea pigs profitable.

As we are in touch with all the breeders of the country, we have accepted a contract from one of the largest users of these animals to supply them for two years. We can get more contracts if we are sure of the supply. So here is proposition for you to think over. Do not confuse it with buy back scheme, as we will only act as your broker, selling your surplus at the highest possible price, charging you a small commission. We will furnish you breeding stock at cost plus small commission, or you may buy where you wish. The only condition is you must have healthy foundation stock. As we buy in large lots can save you money. You must agree to furnish us a certain number a month, at current market price or we will give you a year's contract at stated price.

RATS AND MICE

For Pleasure and Profit.

By H. C. BROWN.

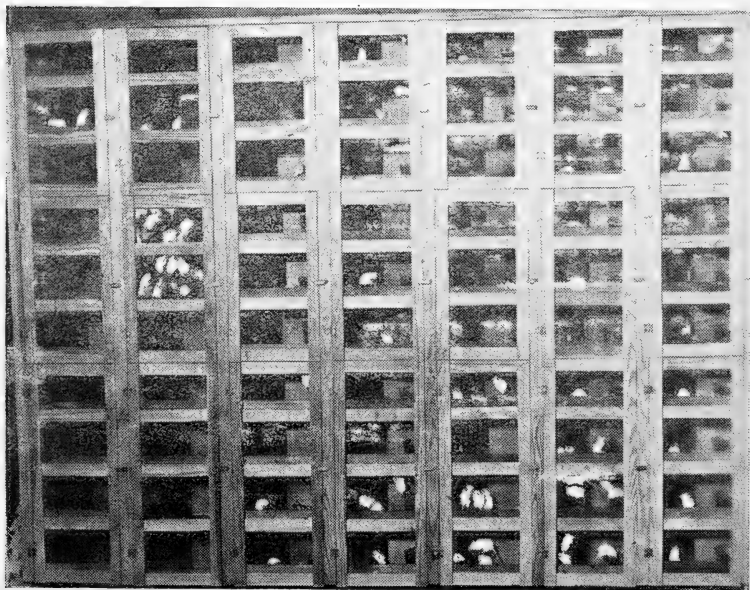

(Pres. of Brown Pet Stock Co., Emporia, Kan.)

The breeding of white and fancy Rats and Mice is attracting much attention at present, as these small animals are in great demand for laboratory use and are commanding a price that makes the raising of them very profitable as well as interesting pastime.

The writer of this article is not one of the oldest breeders of these small animals, but is one of the largest breeders in this country, and will offer a few suggestions on the housing and feeding of rats and mice.

Housing and Breeding.

White and Colored Rats should be kept in colonies of from six to ten females with one male in a box or cage with about 70 square inches of floor space for each animal while breeding, and when the females begin to show that they will soon bring young, each should be placed in individual pens containing at least 200 square inches of floor space, furnished with plenty of fine straw, rags or paper to build their nest with, and remain in there to rear their young. When young are from four to five weeks old, they should be weaned and the female placed back in the breeding pen.

White and Colored Mice should be kept in colonies of one male to each two females or not more than three females. Cages should contain at least 90 square inches of floor space and a nesting box about 3x3x4 inches, which should be filled with paper, fine straw, or rags. The female will raise their young in these pens; the young should be weaned at from three to four weeks of age. Mice breed very fast and one female will produce from 40 to 60 young in a year.

Feeding.

Rats and Mice require feeding but once each day, and as they do most of their feeding at night or late in the evening, the evening is the best time to feed. These little animals will eat almost any kind of grain, seeds, or bread, and any good balanced ration of grain will do. We would not advice feeding a great quantity of any one grain, especially corn. Young mice at four weeks of age are about one-third grown, and when eight weeks old are laboratory size. All one need do to sell mice is to advertise and let people know you have stock for sale and you will be surprised at the result

MINK AND FERRETS

Most people think these two animals are the same. In looks, habits and breeding they are alike, but not as to the value of their fur. The fur of the ferret is of very little value, while the fur of the mink brings very high prices. The mink is bred for its fur, while the ferret is bred for rat and rabbit hunting as well as pets. A ferret will keep rats out of mill, warehouse, etc.

In raising mink, you must have good stout pen, made of heavy wire with top covered. Running water is desirable. The dens may be of hollow logs, tile, or boxes that are dry. A good ferret pen may be made 6 feet long, 3 feet wide, and about 3 feet high. Divide off one end for sleeping and breeding. This part should have good, tight, wood floor; runs may be of clay or dirt, with some solid material underneath to keep them from digging out. For bedding use fine hay or straw. Keep the hutches clean.

Breeding.

As a rule, ferrets breed twice a year, but very often only once. The usual litter is from 5 to 7, sometimes more or less. The breeding season is from March until October. The habits of ferrets are like the dog during the breeding season, so any one familiar with breeding dogs will know how to proceed. When the period of oestrus comes upon the female, place her in the hutch with male and let her remain two days, then place her in dry roomy hutch of her own. The females carry the young 42 days. They do not have their eyes open until they are six weeks old.

Feeding.

Always feed at regular hours; the best time is morning and evening. Feed as much as they will clean up at one time. Their staple foods are bread, milk, mush, oatmeal, cooked potatoes and scraps from the table. Raw meat may be fed two or three times a week. If they become too fat, dilute the milk so the quantity is the same, but is less fattening. For full information on breeding and management, training, and working of ferrets, write R. G. Bullerdick, Richmond, Ind., who publishes a little book on the subject.

SKUNKS.

For fur farming, the Skunk takes the smallest outlay of capital. Good odorless breeding skunks may be purchased as low as $5.00. The pens may be built of wire, sheet tin, cement, or boards. Wire should be set about two feet under ground to keep them from digging out. Pens should be about 3 feet high, with wire overhanging 18 inches or two feet. Dens may be made by digging a trench and covering it over and hollow tile or logs may be used. To make good fur the skunk should come in contact with earth. Bedding should be of leaves, hay, weeds, etc.

The breeding season comes in February. One male may be kept with six or seven females, or may be kept in pairs. Be sure and separate before young are born, as the male will kill the young. The young will appear in May and look like young rats. Young should be operated on when from four to six weeks old and scent bag removed.

A skunk will eat most anything a cat will, and in addition, rotten apples, berries, fruit, rotten eggs and meat.

If skunks are raised for their fur they may be killed in the late fall, when fur is prime; if to be sold for breeding purposes, may be held later and sold in pairs.

There are very few diseases that affect skunks, if properly cared for. For any one who intends to take up this branch of the industry, should procure good book on the subject; you will find them listed on another page.

SILVER BLACK FOXES

With particular reference to the man and woman of small means.

The average citizen of these large United States, who rides about in a Ford, finds it hard to realize that thousands of automobiles are made every year, each selling for from $10,000 to $20,000, but he finds it still harder to believe that a single piece of fur can be sold for from $100 to $1,200.

Not so long ago I was in a furrier's establishment in Philadelphia, in which I had a Jaguar skin mounted. While there, I saw displayed in the window three lion skins and four or five tiger skins. Their price was $1,000 apiece for the lion skins and $1,200 apiece for the tiger skins. In another store I saw half a dozen polar bear skins which sold for $1,000 each. Asking if they sold well, I was told they could not begin to supply the demand. And mind you, these skins were sold to be used merely as rugs.

Do Silver Fox skins sell? Keep in mind the thousands of people who have expensive cars; people who buy $1,000 rugs; people who buy $10,000 necklaces; people who have $500,000 houses and from 20 to 50 servants on their private payroll; people who travel about in their own yachts. Keep these people in mind and you will answer your question with a smile, for a Silver Fox skin is a puny little article compared with the items mentioned before, and the purchase of a Silver Fox skin is only an unimportant incident in the routine of a rich woman.

Do Silver Fox skins sell? Yes, they sell, and sell well. To generalize on prices is always confusing and misleading. Each skin is separately appraised and sold on its merit. Thus you find one skin sold for $250 and another for $1,200. However, this is certain: A good skin brings good money.

To sell good skins, you must have good animals. A good skin cannot come from a poor grade animal, nor can a good animal come from poor grade foundation stock. Therefore, if you think at all of buying Silver Foxes, buy only the best—at least 85% perfect—If you don't, you only fool yourself.

As an industry, the raising of Silver Foxes is well established, with an investment of many millions of dollars. There are at least two Governments, the United States and the Canadian, which have recognized the importance of this industry by their research work, and the dissemination of knowledge regarding the industry. Many, who have never heard of fur farming in general and the great Silver Fox industry in particular, appear to regard the industry as shrouded in deep mystery. Consequently, much needless rot and nonsense is said and printed about it. For authentic information, address the Bureau of Biological Survey, Washington, D. C., the Commission of Conservation, Ottawa, Canada, the Black Fox Magazine, New York, any one of the Silver Fox breeders listed in this book, or the undersigned.

No attempt can be made in this space to touch on the subject of fur ranching, how to build a ranch, how to select your breeding stock, how to care for the animals, how to dispose of your pelts, how to make money out of the business. To do the subject justice, requires more space than the size of this book. However, to the beginner, I would say: Buy the best foxes you can get; keep the animals in large yards; keep them clean, feed only clean food, read all the literature you can get on the subject, use common sense, join the American Fox Breeders' Association.

You agree, Silver Fox ranching is a fascinating business. But you cannot live on fascination. One lives on what one may buy with money. Hence the question: Does the business pay? It does. Suppose you had ten pairs of real, high grade Silver Black Foxes. They would give you annually from 25 to 45 pelts. Put the average at $300 per pelt, and you have an income of from $7,500 to $13,500. Your running expenses should be less than $2,000. With these figures, which you can easily verify, it would seem that you are pretty comfortable.

Perhaps you are a man or woman of small means and these figures stagger you. They are not as formidable as they look. True, ten pairs of Silver Foxes represent an investment of from $10,000 to $20,000, and that sum probably goes clear over your head. In that case, start with one pair; make arrangements with a breeder to exchange pups to give you fresh blood, and before long you will be a big breeder. If you have not enough money to buy one pair, combine with three or four associates or friends; buy one pair and breed until all members are supplied. This course, naturally, will take a little time; but, I ask you, would any other line make you independent more quickly?

Suppose you now had an income of from $75 to $150 per month. You are dissatisfied with your income, your business prospects, with everything, and you wish to change. Do you really believe there is any business or professional line in which you can make more progress, say, within three years from today, than in the Silver Fox line? Get your own proof; ask the lawyers, doctors, you know. Ask the business men you know, and get your answer. Ask the fellow who is working for someone else, and let him tell you how he became rich—in experience—while the boss was holding his nose to the grind stone. Ask yourself: By how many thousands are you richer today than you were three years ago?

The figures in the Silver Fox industry seem forbidding to the outsider, but I say to you this: If you are willing to lay out for yourself a definite course of action, covering, say, three years; if you are willing to stick to that course; if you are able to lay aside just a few dollars monthly, YOU CAN become a Silver Fox Rancher, as any Silver Fox Rancher or the undersigned will be glad to prove to you.

FEEDING AND CARE OF FOXES.

Wild foxes do not live entirely on flesh as many suppose, but will eat grass and berries. If their diet was entirely flesh, the ranch-bred fox would, after a time, develop indigestion and suffer from worms. In order to prevent this, a balanced ration, consisting of meat, fish, biscuit, fruit and milk, can be fed with excellent results. A great deal will depend upon the locality in which the ranch is situated.

In Newfoundland and Aleska, for instance, fish form the principal diet, supplemented by such other food as is available. In Prince Edward Island they feed their foxes practically anything a human being will eat, and in addition give them grass, minnows, mice, etc. Meat diet for foxes consists of horse meat, beef, butcher scraps, chickens (heads and legs), fish (both fresh and cured), lobsters, rabbits, rats, birds, squirrels, old cattle and sheep. Meat can be fed either raw or cooked (par-boiled), and when so fed is salted slightly.

When salt meat is used it should be freshened by being placed in running water for a day or two before being fed to the animals. Where cold storage plants or bait freezers are available, meat can be kept in perfect condition for an indefinite period. In localities where old cattle and horses are procurable, they can be kept on the hoof and killed when needed. About a quarter pound of meat is a fair ration for a fox, but as foxes often bury their food, care should be taken to see that this amount is not exceeded.

Overfeeding with foxes, as with other animals, is lable to produce serious results; besides meat, a large variety of food is available for foxes—bread, biscuits, porridge, grass, vegetables, fruits, milk and eggs. Dog biscuits, softened with milk and water, are used on some ranches with good results. Some good brands of specially made fox biscuit are now on the market and are very good.

Great care should be taken to see that the food for foxes is not only properly prepared, but properly served. The dishes should be kept scrupulously clean, being frequently scalded and scrubbed. Water should be supplied in such a way that it is not fouled by the foxes and the drinking trough should be fastened on a fence or tree in such a way that the foxes cannot climb over it. As mentioned above, foxes sometimes bury their food; when this is the case, food should be withheld until the hidden cache is discovered or the food is disposed of. If one fox dominates another and is getting too large a share of the food, they should be separated or a sufficiently large amount placed in the pen overnight to provide for both animals and removed when both have had enough.

General Directions.

Bone should be fed, especially to young foxes, to assist in building up bone and in removing the milk teeth. Lime water, about a teaspoonful a day, should be fed with their milk. The pregnant mother should also be fed bone broth and limy foods to insure strong limbs for her young. Don't overfeed your foxes. Until one year of age, they can be fed almost as much as they will eat. After they are older, too much food will

The mother should be well fed for several weeks before the young are born. Milk, eggs and obne broth are good. When the young are born. Milk, eggs and bone broth are good. When killed rabbit or live hen is put in the pen. After the young are born the mother should be fed several times a day with meat, eggs, new milk, broth, oatmeal and a plentiful supply of clean water.

It is not difficult to keep foxes in captivity, and with ordinary care and attention, anyone should be able to keep animals in good condition. Study your foxes, their disposition and habits, and treat them accordingly.

Mating.

It is during the first six months of the year, from January to July, that may be called the critical period in breeding foxes. At this time, owing to their wild nature, foxes are extremely sensitive to strange noises and smells and ranches should be closed to everyone except the keepers. The keeper should move cautiously and quietly about the pens when feeding. He should have a post of observation from which he can see the pens and ont be seen. From this post he can ascertain when mating occurs. Fifty-one days is the usual period of gestation.

If the keeper plans to remove the male, he should have the jpens built in such a manner that the male may be shuit out, away from the female, without a suspicion, on the part of the foxes, of design in such a removal. The action of some breeders in entering the pen and catching the dog with tongs or cathing box, is universally condemned as very dangerous at this period. If the male is kept close by, he will watch and warn whenever he fears danger; and, moreover, he takes an interest in the rearing of the young, frequently carrying his food along the fence, trying to give it to the female and the young. Some breeders claim that the male fox can be left in the pen during the breeding season without causing bad results, but it is considered much safer for the new or inexperienced rancher to remove the male during this period.

It is not usual for parent foxes to kill the young intentionally; but, when they become nervous, they sometimes remove the pups to another place. A mother will frequently become greatly excited and, dashing into her nest, will carry out the pups, one by one, and bury them in the snow or mud. This frequently occurs and is the great fear of ranchers in the spring months. It is difficult to tell what to do in such an emergency, except to see that the foregoing preventative measures are taken. These have successsfully been carried out.

A crate of chickens or rabbits should be kept near at hand so that if the mother carries her young about, a live chicken or rabbit may be put into the pen to attract her attention and turn her from the impulse of hiding the young elsewhere. One breeder says he had stopped one mother with an egg which he threw in front of her from outside the fence when she was carrying out her pups.

Some ranchers, during the whelping season, always keep posted regarding the whereabouts of at least one cat with young kittens. If the mother fox, for any reason, proves to be incapable of rearing her young, they are taken from her and reared on the cat until four or five weeks old, when the cat will usually desert them. They are then able to lap milk. Young foxes have been found stiff and cold, but by warming them in hot cotton wool and providing them with a feline wet-nurse, have finally grown to maturity. A nursing bottle and a medicine dropper also might be kept on hand to feed milk.

Information for Breeders.

The young are blind for fourteen to eighteen days and do not leave the nest; but, when they are about four weeks old, they venture out into the pen and often in answer to the decoy call of the keeper. They soon learn to lap milk and eat. When less than three months old the mother weans them and they may go to quarters of their own.

Foxes have only one litter a year, each litter consisting of from one to ten pups, which so far is the record. No authentic instances are yet recorded of two litters in one year, although unsupported claims have been made that certain breeders have bred two litters in one year from one pair of foxes; but it is believed that it may occur within a few years when the animals are more domestic in habit.

According to the best authorities, foxes in the wild state are monogamous. In captivity, they are usually paired for life, and in many instances re-mating is said to be impossible. In some cases, however, foxes can be remated yearly. Some males will mate with several females during the same winter. Two systems of double mating are practiced. Under one system, a male and two females of the same litter are given the run of three pens. After mating they are all separated into their respective pens. The other system also requires the use of three pens, the male spending alternate days with each of the two females. When mating is effected in these ways, success is not certain as with single mating.

The fox continues prolific until about ten or eleven years of age. If a pair fail to produce young after the eighth year, they are usually slaughtered. In the majority of cases, foxes mate before they are a year old. Some breeders endeavor to mate a young female with a male a year older.

Silver Black Foxes

Every self-made, successful, wealthy man can definitely trace the beginning of his success to a certain "something."

Perhaps it was an advertisement; perhaps a book or an article he read somewhere, sometime.

This ad will mark the turning point of many a life: will turn many a drifting soul into a definite channel that leads to happiness, to independence and to comparative wealth.

- It is possible that in later years YOU will regard this ad as the mile stone that marks the turning point in YOUR life.

If you are one of the many who regarded the possession of a Silver Fox ranch as possible only to the wealthy, let us show you that you were in error.

With determination and will power any one who really wishes may become a Silver Fox rancher.

We are prepared to prove this statement.

MARKETS—MARKETING.

In marketing anything, whether it is rabbits or a breakfast food, you must let the public know what you have. The best method in this industry is, use the columns of the journals; you will find them listed elsewhere; any of them will be glad to help you in writing your ad. A small ad. will generally sell all you have, but an ad. run all the time will give you a steady market for all you can raise, at good prices.

Now as to marketing meat rabbits and the products. If you will dress and put up in attractive package a nice, fat young rabbit and take it to the first-class hotels and restaurants in your city or town, you will soon get a contract for all you can produce. The hospitals use rabbit meat in large quantities on account of its high nutritive value. Run a small classified ad. in your local paper and you will also find a ready sale at prices from 25 to 40 cents a pound. Local commission houses offer a market for dressed rabbits, but the price will not be as high as selling direct to the consumer. There are several large companies organized and organizing who will offer a market for all rabbits that can be produced.

K. C. Beck & Co., Hutchison, Kansas, use each year thousands of pounds of rabbit meat. The Commercial Rabbit Breeders Association, located at Oklahoma City, are planning on big packing plant. The American Rabbit Products Co., recently organized at Kansas City, will soon offer a market for rabbits. There is also another recently organized at Houston, Texas. There are also others in other sections of the country. The publishers of this book will issue a bulletin from time to time, showing the markets, etc., will be sent to any address on request, if you will send stamp. They will also be glad to answer any questions and give any assistance possible at all times.

In the following list you will find names of hide and fur dealers, who will pay good prices for skins.

Cavies, White Mice and Rats are used for Pets and Experimental purposes. All hospitals, laboratories, medical schools, etc., use them in large quantities. If you only have few for sale you can most generally find a market in your own town or city. In the following list you will find the names of some big users and buyers of these animals; up to the present time the demand has been far greater than the supply. H. K. Mulford at Glenolden, Pa., uses from one to two thousand guinea pigs a week, about 500 mice and a large number of rabbits and

THE NATIONAL REGISTRATION SYSTEM.

A Registered Rabbit protects both the buyer and seller. To have a rabbit registered, it is first necessary to have it carefully examined by an official Registrar, who is usually appointed by the branch association of The National. If the specimen is found to be free from all diseases and entirely free from all disqualifications, and comes up to the National standards as to color, shape and weight, and has been bred according to the standards, the Registrar will tattoo a certain number in its right ear and papers will be made out for it. It is then recorded in the Stud Book of The National Breeders and Fanciers Association of America. A registered animal is one to be proud of, as it means as near perfection as possible.

A Belgian Hare or New Zealand Red will not be registered under five months of age; Flemish Giants and heavy breeds not until at least six months of age. The Belgian should weigh 8 pounds. The New Zealand buck should weigh 9 pounds and the doe 10 pounds. The Flemish Giant buck should weigh not less than 10 pounds and the doe 11 pounds.

Following is a list of Official Registrars. For further information and name of your nearest Registrar, write C. S. Gibson, 1045 W. Warren Ave., Detroit, Mich.
